$6.5 million in fees

Parking meter firm's take from renegotiated deal exceeds city's projection

Chicago Tribune

City Hall paid $6.5 million during the past year to the company that's leasing Chicago's parking meters—about $500,000 more than Mayor Emanuel's administration predicted when it renegotiated the deal.

Although there was a higher tab to reimburse Chicago Parking Meters for spaces taken out of service, there was some good news as well. The city could end up paying millions of dollars less each year for free parking provided to disabled people, thanks to a new state law that limits free parking to those who are physically unable to use pay boxes.

That's the upshot of a Tribune review of the most recent reports and data related to the unpopular lease of about 36,000 metered parking spots to the Chicago Parking Meters company. The original deal struck in late 2008 under then-Mayor Richard M. Daley saw the city get $1.1 billion upfront in return for a 75-year lease of Chicago's paid street parking system. Nearly all of the one-time windfall was spent by the time Daley handed over the reins to Emanuel. Meanwhile, the contract required the city to drastically raise rates on behalf of the company.

The documents, obtained through an open records request, and interviews of city officials also indicate that Emanuel's swap of free Sunday neighborhood parking for longer payment hours at most meters could reduce overall costs to city parkers. And the Tribune review showed the city is recovering more of its costs for out-of-service meters from construction and utility companies whose work temporarily puts them off line.

Chicago Corporation Counsel Stephen Patton said the results show that Emanuel's revised contract, which aimed to make a bad deal less onerous while also providing the perks of free Sundays and an option to pay by cellphone, looks like it will be a success over the long haul.

The generous terms negotiated under Daley saw the city paying back the company for removal of meters, changes of hours or rates, and spaces temporarily taken offline for street repairs, utility work and festivals.

Around the time Daley left office, the company started sending invoices to the city, with one year's tab hitting $53 million. The Emanuel administration disputed the bill, the matter went to arbitration and eventually the contract was renegotiated.

Patton, the city's top lawyer, contends that without the tweaks made to the contract, the city would have ended up paying tens of millions of dollars more than the $6.5 million it shelled out during the past year for meter system changes. And those higher payments could have been due in each of the 70 remaining years of the lease—which Patton valued at more than $1 billion to the city, using the current value of a dollar.

"We got out of this huge liability, and we are reaping the benefits, and we will be every year," said Patton, referring to the contract changes the City Council approved in June 2013. But Patton also conceded that the best the city could do was soften the blow.

"We couldn't start from scratch," Patton said. "We inherited a contract. We took the existing contract and turned it into something much better for the city and the taxpayers."

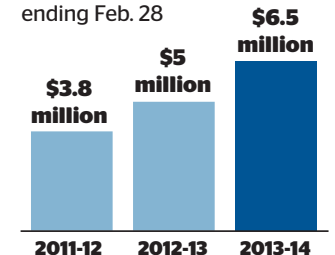

What's still totally unknown under the new deal is how the parking meter company will fare with a pay-by-phone system that was fully in place for the first time last Saturday. The revised contract allows the company to profit by up to $2 million a year from transaction fees and interest on pay-by-phone accounts. The city would get any pay-by-cell profits above $2 million, a bit of a silver lining for taxpayers resentful that the money they pay to park no longer goes into city coffers.

Fees paid by city

The city paid more to the company leasing Chicago's parking meters in the fiscal year ending Feb. 28 for changes to the meter system, including meters temporarily offline for street repair, utility work and festivals. The contract between the city and Chicago Parking Meters was revised a year ago in an effort to reduce future payments that city officials say would have been higher.

FEES PAID FOR OUT-OF-SERVICE METERS

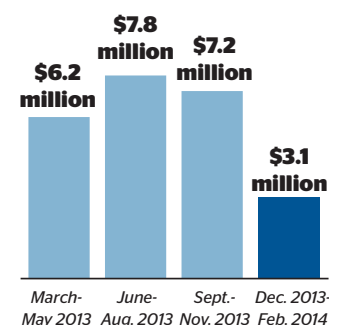

By fiscal year ending Feb. 28

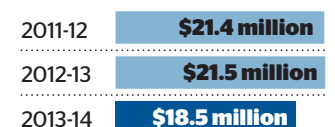

FEES PAID FOR EXCESS FREE DISABLED PARKING

The city also is required to pay fees for free disabled parking that exceeds 6 percent of all parking. A new state law that took effect Jan. 1 limits free parking to those who are physically unable to use pay boxes, which has cut back on practice.

Last fiscal year's total waived fees, by quarter

Hobby Lobby just opened up a new can of worms

Parker Marie Molloy

@parkermolloy

On Monday, the Supreme Court ruled that some companies have the right to subvert a federal law in order to remain consistent with their religious beliefs. In this case, it was Hobby Lobby's religious belief that birth control is immoral, which the court's ruling says allows Hobby Lobby to refuse to pay for certain forms of contraception through employee insurance.

There's a certain irony involved when a group of individuals interested in reducing the number of unintended pregnancies oppose making widely available one of the most effective methods of preventing unintended pregnancies. Those celebrating the Supreme Court's recent Hobby Lobby decision do understand that this will lead to more abortions or, at the very least, more young mothers "looking for a government handouts," don't they?

I digress.

How did we get here? How did we get to the point where a business—one that sells yarn, construction paper and glitter, no less—has its own religious views? Well, the answer to that is simple: 2010's Citizens United v. Federal Elections Commission decision that declared—to the dismay and disbelief of many—that corporations are people. And people, as we know, have the freedom to practice whatever religion they see fit.

And who knows? Maybe the owners of Hobby Lobby really do find birth control—which virtually all women ages 15-44 who have had sexual intercourse have used—to be abhorrent and so against their own religious beliefs that they need to actively try to stop their employees from using it. If that's the case, though, why did their employee insurance policies cover various forms of contraceptives from the company's inception in 1972 until nearly immediately prior to filing suit in 2012? Odd, isn't it?

Yet Hobby Lobby finds itself the victor of a Supreme Court challenge this week, and the consequences will be far-reaching.

How long will it be before we begin seeing excuses like, "I am the CEO of a large financial services company, and my religion says that pornography and alcohol are vices that must be avoided. Therefore, I have chosen to simply not pay my employees at all—or to pay them in the form of coupons for items approved by my personal religion—as really, by the transitive property, any money I pay through payroll was mine at a time, and I have a deeply held religious belief against pornography and alcohol, which they very well may purchase should I pay them."

The examples could go on, and the situations could become more absurd. While generally, "slippery slope" arguments tend to be slightly nonsensical, the step from Citizens United to Hobby Lobby leads me to believe that we should be very afraid of the precedents being set.

This ruling opens the door to a world in which companies can cite religious beliefs to create loopholes to get around insurance mandates, minimum wage laws, child labor laws and even the tax code. While you may "stand with Hobby Lobby" now, you may not like the can of worms they've opened up.

"The Court, I fear, has ventured into a minefield," Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg wrote in her dissent. I'm inclined to agree.

Rent prices are still climbing

Chicago Tribune

Average monthly apartment rents in Chicago are pushing $1,100, and strong demand for rental units here and elsewhere is expected to keep them higher for a while.

Typically, the construction of new apartments and moderating demand helps put downward pressure on rents, but the current environment is bucking the trend, according to Ryan Severino, a senior economist at Reis Inc., a real estate research firm.

"Although new supply is likely to exceed the level of demand, demand should nonetheless remain relatively strong given the large number of young, single potential renters," Severino wrote in the firm's quarterly report released Wednesday.

In the Chicago area, effective rents (which measure rents after concessions are removed) rose almost 1 percent from the first quarter, to an average of $1,098 in the second quarter, Reis said. That's an average, though, and many of the new buildings that have opened in downtown Chicago in recent months have rents starting at $2,000 a month.

Compared with a year ago, Chicago-area rents rose 3.7 percent during the second quarter, and the apartment vacancy rate slipped 0.1 percent, to 3.5 percent.

Holiday CTA service added

Agency will ramp up trains and buses for fireworks, concerts

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

The CTA is adding extra service to events around the city this holiday weekend in anticipation of more riders, some of whom will be navigating the system for the first time since the CTA completed its transition to Ventra on Tuesday.

The CTA is adding service for the Fourth of July fireworks display at Navy Pier, the Dave Matthews Band concerts at Northerly Island and the Cruz Azul vs. Pumas exhibition soccer match at Soldier Field.

Since extra crowds are expected for these events, the CTA is recommending riders get their Ventra cards or load money on these cards before the weekend.

The CTA is no longer accepting disposable magnetic stripe cards. The agency is only accepting Ventra cards, certain personal bank cards, some phones and cash (on buses).

Also on the Fourth of July, the CTA will require riders to fold up strollers and refrain from bringing bikes onto the trains. Bikes still are allowed on buses.

The CTA doesn't have a stroller policy except that it encourages riders to fold strollers when buses become crowded. Bikes are not allowed on trains during rush hour and some holidays.

This Fourth of July, the CTA will provide more frequent train service on the Red, Blue, Brown and Orange lines beginning in the early evening. On Friday and Saturday, longer trains will operate on the Red, Blue, Green, Pink, Orange and Brown lines, beginning in the early evening through at least midnight.

Also, the CTA will increase bus service on routes serving Navy Pier, downtown Loop and lakefront areas.

Extra service will be provided along the No. 130-Museum Campus and No. 146-Inner Drive/Michigan Express routes for the Dave Matthews Band concerts at Northerly Island on Friday and Saturday, and the Cruz Azul exhibition soccer match against the Pumas at Soldier Field at 2 p.m. Sunday.

U.S. discloses military presence in Somalia

U.S. military advisors have secretly operated in Somalia since around 2007 and Washington plans to deepen its security assistance to help the country fend off threats by Islamist militant group al-Shabab, U.S. officials said.

The comments are the first detailed public acknowledgement of a U.S. military presence in Somalia dating back since the U.S. administration of George W. Bush and add to other signs of a deepening U.S. commitment to Somalia's government, which the Obama administration recognized last year.

The deployments, consisting of up to 120 troops on the ground, go beyond the Pentagon's January announcement that it had sent a handful of advisors in October. That was seen at the time as the first assignment of U.S. troops to Somalia since 1993, when two U.S. helicopters were shot down and 18 American troops killed in the "Black Hawk Down" disaster.

The plans to further expand U.S. military assistance coincide with increasing efforts by the Somali government and African Union peacekeepers to counter a bloody seven-year insurgent campaign by the al-Qaida-linked al-Shabab to impose strict Islamic law inside Somalia.

Those U.S. plans include greater military engagement and new funds for training and assistance for the Somali National Army, after years of working with the African Union Mission in Somalia, or AMISOM, which has about 22,000 troops in the country from Uganda, Kenya, Sierra Leone, Burundi, Djibouti and Ethiopia.

Hey Melo, this should convince you to sign with the Bulls

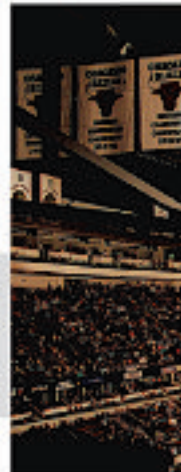

On Tuesday, Carmelo Anthony received the red carpet treatment as he made his first stop on his free agency tour in Chicago. While I'm certain the Bulls organization, including the front office, coach Tom Thibodeau and certain key players, did a great job selling Chicago to Carmelo, I would like to put the icing on the cake with my top five reasons he should sign with the Bulls. LELA OLDS IS A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

1. The Bulls are in desperate need of a scorer, and Carmelo needs a coach like Thibodeau to improve his defense. Melo signing with the Bulls would solve both those problems with ease.

Stop saying the Bulls are cheap

Evan F. Moore

» redeyesports@tribune.com
» @evanfmoore

Chicago fandom is known for creating false scenarios.

The Curse, Bear weather, Corey Crawford glove side and the "meteoric" rise of Josh McCown come to mind.

The most puzzling surrounds the Bulls and their allegedly tight purse strings.

I want to think our sports fans can use some of the passion they have and channel it into critical thinking skills.

Some do, but it seems many do not. Here are four reasons why the Bulls aren't cheap:

They gave Jay Williams money when they didn't have to: Remember when former No. 1 draft pick Jay Williams totaled his bike and his NBA career? What most fans conveniently forgot was Williams violated his contract by operating a motorcycle. The Bulls could have terminated his deal on the spot. The team came to an agreement with Williams on a $3 million settlement along with getting their former point guard the best medical treatment available. Sounds like Jerry Reinsdorf and John Paxson went above what was required.

They paid Michael Jordan: Ever since the failed free agency coup of Tracy McGrady and Grant Hill, the Bulls have gotten a bad rap. Like most rumors, people will run with them until they become the truth in someone's eyes. Remember, the Bulls did give Michael Jordan $30 million. Maybe it wasn't what he might have deserved over the totality of his career, but that amount of dough is nothing to sneeze at. Also, have you ever wondered why teams in Florida and Texas have an edge in free agency? The aforementioned states have no income tax. It seems like your beef isn't with Reinsdorf, but it might be with Illinois' General Assembly. Maybe the fans will get out and vote next time.

Reinsdorf takes care of former players:

Look closely at the Bulls and the Sox. Both teams employ former players, and Reinsdorf might be loyal to a fault. Scottie Pippen, John Paxson, Bill Wennington, Stacey King, Ozzie Guillen, Harold Baines, Robin Ventura, Jim Thome and Frank Thomas all have been or are currently with one of those organizations.

Derrick Rose's contract: Even though Rose hasn't played much recently, he still is the team's highest paid player. His current contract spawned the "Derrick Rose Rule"; you're crazy if you don't think Reinsdorf was all for rewarding him in the wake of all his achievements.

EVAN F. MOORE IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

3. Melo would join an elite group of players who want to win just as much as he does. No longer would he play alongside teammates who seem to enjoy getting fined and benched. (Looking at you, J.R. Smith.) Bulls players are about teamwork and one ultimate goal—winning a championship.

4. Bulls fans treat every player like a superstar. Sure, Derrick Rose is our hometown hero, but Melo would never be overshadowed. We would welcome him with open arms, as was the case Tuesday.

5. Last but certainly not least, Chicago is just simply the best place to be. We may not have Jack Nicholson at every home game like the Lakers, but our fans trump any celebrity you will ever see courtside. Unlike in Houston or L.A., winter here is a beast, but we learn to live through it. And the United Center isn't considered historic like Madison Square Garden, but the banners at the top highlighting our reign in the '90s will serve as motivation every night.

So, come on, Melo. Make the right decision. Come to our incredible city, join our talented team and let's go for No. 7. See what I did there?

Free-for-all

Tracking the Bulls' pursuit of Carmelo Anthony and LeBron James

Melo swooped through Texas on Wednesday, and the funniest part was how Houston welcomed him: with a sign featuring him in a No. 7 Rockets jersey. Problem is, Jeremy Lin, Anthony's former teammate, already wears that number in Houston. Lin brushed it off via Twitter, however: "Luke 6:29 - If someone slaps you on one cheek, turn to them the other also."

1	What's more heartbreaking than the way the U.S. bowed out of the World Cup?	So, so many things that can happen in the world. Also: "Friday Night Lights."	That the World Cup is still going on without us, humming like an annoying mosquito in the background.	That Chicago fans STILL act like they know soccer. With that said, way to step up and support the red, white and blue!	Watching the Bulls constantly get played in free agency.	Playing for the New York Knicks.
2	No Chicago teams are in action Thursday. How will you spend the day?	Coming up with a way to welcome Brad Richards to the Blackhawks.	The same thing I do every night. Pinky: try and take over the world!	Same way I do my other days off. #DayDrinking	#CantLose I'll drink to that.	Hounding Carmelo Anthony on social media. #NoShame
3	Welcome Brad Richards to the Blackhawks.	Hi.	Hi, Brad! We hope to see your formidable red playoff beard this year.	Who the hell is Brad Richards?!	Brad, we've beaten the Kings before and next year is no different. #TakeItBack	Welcome to the Chicago Blackhawks. We don't play around with any of that thin crust mess.
4	What is Carmelo Anthony's wife thinking throughout NBA free agency?	"Why was I in 'Think Like a Man Too'? I did nothing, and that movie was terrible."	"These dinner table conversations are getting really self-centered, Melo."	Wait, Carmelo has a wife? News to me.	"I'll let him have his fun, but we're going shopping when he gets back." #EmpireStateOfMind	"What's a pay cut?"
5	Jose Abreu just keeps smashing home runs. You impressed?	I don't care about the White Sox.	As someone who struggles to bat .200 in company softball, YES.	I was impressed with Abreu since opening day.	Yessss! Hell yes! #InnerHawk	Yes, but not as impressed as I am with Carmelo Anthony's scoring prowess.

Jose Abreu
USA TODAY SPORTS

Jose, Jose Jose Jose!

So what if the White Sox are having a rough year—Jose Abreu is swinging for history. The slugger on Wednesday was named American League Rookie of the Month for June. Abreu, 27, batted .313 with 10 home runs and 22 RBIs to become the first player in Sox history to win the award twice in one season (he also won it in April). He also is on pace to hit 50 home runs, which would break the MLB rookie record of 49.

By Lauren Krause | FOR REDEYE

Sandal season is in full swing and new trends—and some old—are hitting the streets. If you're looking to put a new pair in rotation, it's time to read up on the summer's hottest styles.

4 SANDAL TRENDS TO TRY THIS SUMMER

BARE ESSENTIALS

Wood & leather

A '70s cool girl staple, mixed-material sandals are classic, but their selling point is versatility. Penelope's manager and stylist Penny Gac said this on-trend style is one of the Wicker Park store's biggest sellers. "The natural wooden heel with the leather goes with everything; they're very classic and can be dressed up or down," Gac said. Choose a pair in a natural shade such as brown or beige with a manageable heel to get the most wear out of 'em.

Comfort and flatforms

There's a reason why everyone from the Olsen twins to Lucky magazine editor Eva Chen are sporting Birkenstocks this summer. "The comfort trend is having a big moment, you can see this in the Birkenstock look and in flatform sandals," said Lauren O'Neill, manager at Click Shoes & More in Lakeview. Similar in style to a slide or Birkenstock sandal, a flatform is a wide, flat sandal with chunky straps with a platform underneath the slide. They're a normcore, anti-fashion statement, O'Neill said. "Overall, this trend leans toward minimalism—neutral colors, simple lines." Though it's mostly ladies driving the comfort trend, guys can also get away with a classic Birkenstock, said Eliot Andre, general manager of Lori's Shoes in Lincoln Park. "You can make it look good with skinny jeans and a patterned shirt; it's really how you wear it."

Upgraded flip-flops

Men's sandal options are considerably smaller than women's, but that's no excuse to default to cheap rubber flip-flops. Tari Breeden, general manager at City Soles in Wicker Park, recommends a sturdy leather flip-flop. "A leather flip-flop for men is current [and] they last longer, plus the ones we carry have arch support," Breeden said. In general, the best practice for men is sticking with tried-and-true styles, such as leather thongs, slides or simple gladiators in classic colors such as caramel, cognac or dark brown.

Open-toe shootie

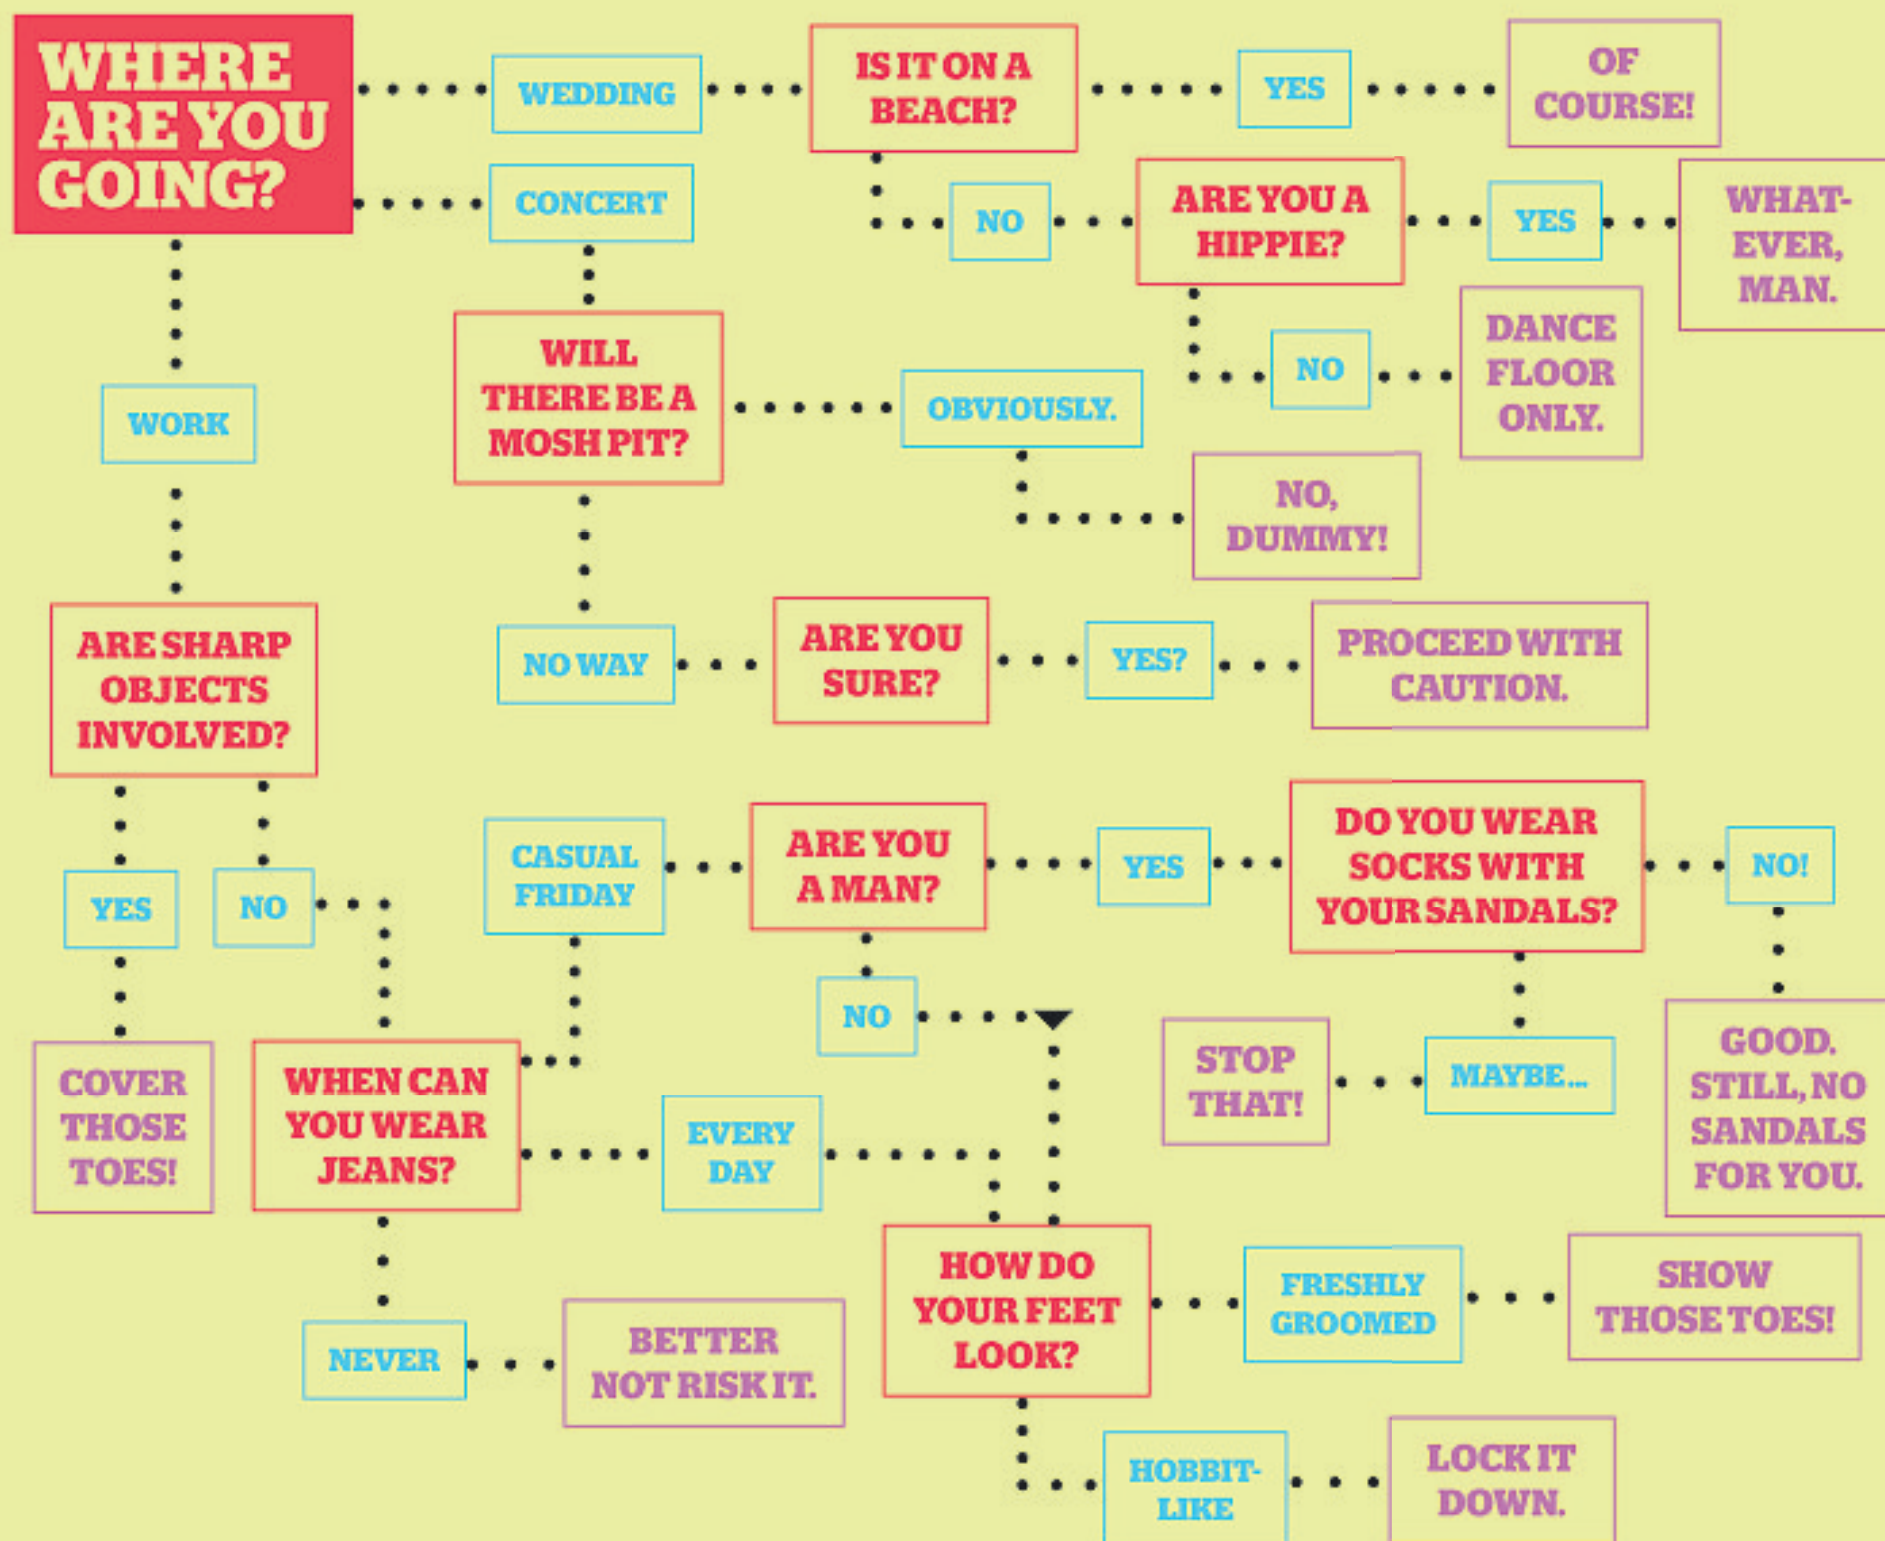

A dressier option for women this year is the open-toe shootie, which is similar to a short boot, but is made in an array of fabrics, colors and styles. Stacked heels and leather detailing are especially popular at Lori's Shoes this season, Andre said. "I've seen people catch onto European-influenced shoes. They're new and interesting and you can wear that stacked heel and open construction so many ways and it's comfortable," he said. "Everyone loves boots, but with the open toe, it's perfect for spring, summer and even transitioning into fall."

...BUT CAN I WEAR SANDALS?

They may be summer's signature shoe, but there's also a little bit of etiquette that comes along with sporting your favorite pair of sandals. Since we'd like to afford you with numerous opportunities for airing out your toesies, we've created this flow chart for three different scenarios—work, a concert and a wedding—to help determine whether you should dare to go bare. DANA MORAN, REDEYE

3 GOODIES WE CAN'T STOP THINKING ABOUT

R+Co.'s Outer Space Flexible Hairspray

$29 at randco.com

I'm stating this up front: I'm not a hairspray fan. But when my stylist finished off my cut with this spray from a new line called R+Co. (from a former Bumble & Bumble creative director), I was won over. The spray never quite hardens, instead offering flexible hold like a very light wax or pomade. I can restyle throughout the day while still keeping flyaways at bay with no crunchy helmet hair. Plus, the bottle is pretty enough to leave out on the sink. KATE BERNOT

Laroche-Posay Anthelios 50 Daily Anti-Aging Primer with Sunscreen

$39.99 at Sephora

As a pale-skinned gal, I am in constant pursuit of the best face sunscreen for everyday wear. I've tried and chucked so many that are too greasy, too chalky or smell weird, but this stuff is a godsend. It has what the package describes as a "dry-gel texture," which was so odd I thought that it was dried up at first. It's nearly scentless, perfectly matte and, in addition to providing broad-spectrum SPF 50 protection, it has a little anti-aging boost thanks to a dose of antioxidants, too. Worth every penny. USAARNETT

Jamberry Professional Nail Lacquer

$15 at jamberrynails.com

If you're like me, you often scoff at the notion of paying more than $8 for a bottle of nail polish that you might regret or that will gum up almost immediately (even $5 is a stretch sometimes). But sometimes, you really do get what you pay for. Jamberry's line of professional polish holds up its end of the bargain with incredible pigment that actually matches the swatch and has surprising staying power of at least a week (with proper base and top coat application). Try the Lilac (a creamy Barbie pink) for a neutral look or Lemon Drop (sunshine in a bottle) if you like something that pops. JESSICA GALLIART

4 fireworks-watching spots for the Fourth

ADLER PLANETARIUM

You could join the hordes at Navy Pier to watch top-notch fireworks, but why not hang out on the Adler's manicured lawn? Unobstructed views of Navy Pier across the lake are lovely, and you'll even have room to spread out a blanket. 1300 S. Lake Shore Drive. Free.

WINNEMAC PARK

Although unsanctioned by the city, Lincoln Square's impressive amateur fireworks put you up close and personal to impressive displays on the park's ballfields. (Key words: "up close" and "personal.") Exercise caution! 5101 N. Leavitt St. Free.

SOUTH BOULEVARD BEACH

South Boulevard Beach showcases fireworks all the way

People watch fireworks at the Adler Planetarium. CHRIS SWEDA/TRIBUNE FILE

down Chicago's coast, but is a gentler (and quieter) way to enjoy the explosions. Bonus: easy access to the beach's public bathrooms. South Boulevard at the lakefront, Evanston.

FOSTER BEACH

You can't exactly drag your cooler into the posh Saddle & Cycle Club, but neighbors report unparalleled views of the club's Independence Day fireworks from nearby Foster Avenue beach. It's a perfect spot to marvel with the rest of the plebeians. 5200 N. Lake Shore Drive. Free.

PICNIC PAIRINGS

Quick pick-ups near 6 parks

By Lisa Arnett | REDEYE

Some people call it a picnic; I call it the perfect excuse to drink wine and pig out on cheese and olives outside in the middle of the day. Either way, there's always the question of where to pick up pre-picnic provisions. So you don't end up stuck with Lunchables from the nearest convenience store, we've matched six picnic destinations with places to procure snacks nearby. Word of warning: Open alcohol is not allowed in Chicago Park District parks. (I don't make the rules, but it's my job to tell you about them.) Booze is permitted at Ravinia and for most public performances at Jay Pritzker Pavilion and the Great Lawn at Millennium Park. LMARNETT@TRIBUNE.COM | REDEYEEATDRINK

Wicker Park

Stop by Chop Shop (2033 W. North Ave. 773-537-4440) and head straight to the deli counter to browse grab-and-go sandwiches ($7-$11 each) as well as pre-made dips and salads. If you've got a few mouths to feed and are planning in advance, call 24 hours ahead of time to order the picnic to-go package, which includes an antipasto platter, breads from Red Hen, pasta salad and your choice of select six-packs of beer or bottles of wine ($40; feeds 4-6).

Promontory Point Park

Pick up baguette sandwiches ($6.95) to-go at Hyde Park cafe Plein Air (5751 S. Woodlawn Ave. 773-966-7531) on your way over to the lakefront. Options include prosciutto with manchego cheese and fig jam or goat cheese with sweet peppers, and both include a side salad with the dressing packaged separately for easy traveling.

Ravinia

Myriad options abound at Chicago French Market (131 N. Clinton St. 312-575-0306) inside Ogilvie Transportation Center; just make sure to allow extra time to wait in line before catching a Metra Union Pacific North Line train to Ravinia Park. Little Goat Bread packs up seriously tasty made-to-order sandwiches, Wisma stocks pre-packaged salads and snacks, and Pastoral is your one-stop-shop for wine, beer, olives, cheeses, baguette sammies and more.

Millennium Park

Before setting up camp for Downtown Sound or the Millennium Park Summer Film Series, design your own picnic box ($12.95) at Toni Patisserie (65 E. Washington St. 312-726-2020). Pick an entree (choose from six baguette sandwiches or two salads), side (chips, fruit cup or side salad) and dessert (brownie, shortbread cookies, macarons or chocolate-chip cookie). For multiple boxes or to avoid a wait, call ahead. Also nearby, the Loop location of gourmet cheese and wine shop Pastoral (53 E. Lake St. 312-658-1250) offers curated picnic spreads ($39.99-$69.99); download a picnic menu and order online at pastoralartisan.com.

Lincoln Park

Plan your picnic time strategically for the chance to choose from ready-to-eat goodies at Green City Market (7 a.m.-1 p.m. Wednesdays and Saturdays at 1790 N. Clark St.). Look for wood-fired pizzas from The Nomad Food Company, sandwiches from Cookies and Carnitas (Saturdays only), salami and soppressata from Underground Meats (Saturdays only) and pastries from Verzenay, just to name a few options. Find a full vendor list online: greencitymarket.org.

Brands Park

Though the July 2 pre-order deadline for the Fourth of July picnic pack at Honey Butter Fried Chicken (3361 N. Elston Ave. 773-478-4000) has passed, the good news is that the Avondale restaurant is extending the offer for the rest of the summer. Call at least 24 hours ahead of time to reserve your picnic meal ($45 for eight pieces of fried chicken, corn muffins with honey butter and seasonal side dishes) and take it to Brands, a small park with ball-fields and plenty of shade.

NIGHTCRAWLERS

SEEN ON THE SCENE AT ...CHLOE'S, 800 W. BELMONT AVE.

This weekend we scouted out the newest addition to Boystown, Chloe's, a club located in the former Spin space. We made some Pride-partying friends while checking out the beer garden. LEON ANDREW HENSLEY, FOR REDEYE

Estevan Acevedo 24, philosopher

What brings you out tonight?
Celebrating Pride. We've got strength in numbers. The more people we have out here, the more we are heard.
Is this your final destination of the night or are you going anywhere else?
No, I'm going to go hang out with my friends, drink, probably go to a party and just chill out. I actually drove a pretty long way to get here. I'm from Arizona, here visiting my boyfriend.

So you're in the infamous long-distance relationship. How is that working?
It's good. It can be hard, but it's really just like any other relationship, just 2,000 miles away.

Liz Miles

24, makeup artist
What are you drinking tonight and why?
I'm drinking a 7 and 7. It's my favorite.
What's your go-to spot for a view of the Pride Parade?
Probably at the corner of Belmont and Halsted. It's easy to get to and has easy access to the bars.
If you were stuck on a fabulous desert island with one Chicago drag queen, who would it be?
Ruby Dee. She's my favorite!

Deirdre Myers

23, grad student
What brings you out tonight?
Pride, and just getting to know the neighborhood.
What are you drinking tonight and why?
It's a spicy cocktail because I like spicy things.
What brings you to Chicago?
I came here for school and just to get out of West Virginia.

Strawberry bingsu ($6.99) at Java N Mug

3247 W. Bryn Mawr Ave. 773-539-0407

Early afternoon is the busiest time of day at Java N Mug, a Korean coffeehouse just around the corner from Northside College Prep High School in Chicago's North Park neighborhood. When school ends, cliques of students pile in, hoping to be the first to claim one of the sets of facing sofas. By 5 p.m., the noise level dies down, much to the delight of the solo patrons on their laptops scattered about the cozy cafe. Served here is typical cafe fare (lattes, smoothies and panini) as well as Asian staples like ramen, bubble tea and the must-try bingsu, a popular Korean dessert. The strawberry version features a scoop of strawberry ice cream atop red bean paste, surrounded by bits of strawberry, banana, kiwi, watermelon, mochi (rice paste) and pineapple, all resting on a bed of shaved ice mixed with condensed milk and misugaru (grain powder). Strawberry sauce is drizzled over as a final touch. It tastes even sweeter and fruitier than it looks. TRIBUNE

Underwood pinot gris and pinot noir

$6 per 375-milliliter can from Union Wine Company (available at Mariano's and unionwinecompany.com)

Yep, wine in a can. Honestly, this new line makes a lot of sense: You can tote cans to the park or other outdoorsy spots where bottles would be cumbersome, plus cans protect wine from oxidizing better than glass does. Most importantly, the wines taste great. Made in Oregon, the pinot gris is crisp and refreshing with traces of fruit, while the pinot noir is light-bodied with dark berry flavors. Cans will debut at Mariano's locations citywide this week, making it easy to pick one up before that Downtown Sound show or spontaneous rooftop grill-out. KATEBERNOT

TIME TO GET GRILLING

When it comes to steaks, rib-eye remains the favorite across the U.S. But the National Cattlemen's Beef Association, an industry group, lists some 28 steak or fillet cuts you can choose from. They come in a range of flavor, texture, tenderness, fat content and price. Just in time for the big holiday, we've got the details on nine of the best cuts for the grill. Each should be seared over direct heat, then finished in a cooler part of the grill. Thinner cuts should cook with just the searing. TRIBUNE; STEAK PHOTOS BY BILL HOGAN/TRIBUNE

The man behind the legend

Chaz Ebert and Steve James consider 'Life Itself'

By Matt Pais | REDEYE

Many, many people around the world have loved and supported the work of late film critic Roger Ebert. But, obviously, you won't find bigger champions of the Pulitzer Prize-winning, Urbana, Ill. native than Chaz Ebert, his wife of more than 20 years, and documentarian Steve James, one of several filmmakers (including Martin Scorsese) who credit Ebert's endorsement as a key factor in their careers. (In James' case, Ebert's praise for "Hoop Dreams" put the film on a national stage.)

That's part of the reason "Life Itself," James' acclaimed doc about Ebert's life that opens Friday, is worth commending for avoiding what could have been a softened, polished look at the world's most famous movie critic. Instead, in large part because Ebert wanted it this way, the film—which gets its title from Ebert's memoir of the same name—refuses to shy away from the iconic Chicagoan's time in the hospital in the final months of his life (he passed away in April 2013). It also includes less-than-perfect elements of his many years working and living in the city.

At the Peninsula Hotel, Chaz Ebert (who lives in Lincoln Park) and James (who lives in Oak Park) talked about the movie and the man. Watch video of the full interview at redeye.chicago.com; below read an excerpt about a moment Roger Ebert wanted in the movie but his wife didn't—and something she wanted changed. MPAIS@TRIBUNE.COM | @MATTPAIS

On what to include

Chaz Ebert: I didn't really want the medical procedure [involving the suction of Ebert's air passage] to be in there, for instance, because it was quite graphic. I saw it every day. So for me, it's something that I could take, but it was extended on the film and at first I didn't want [viewers] to see [him] having his airways cleared. Later in the film, I saw they made the right decision. Roger called Steve [James] in to shoot that when I was out of town because he knew I wouldn't want to have it seen on the screen, but it actually makes the film better. People knew that Roger had a struggle, had it difficult after all the surgeries. People had no idea how difficult it was for him on a daily basis.

Her reaction when she came back into town

CE: I just said, "This is a film Roger wants made." When you have a husband as strong-willed as Roger and someone who has such a good sense of what's cinematic and what isn't, you don't argue with him. You just say, "OK."

Steve James: I knew that Chaz didn't want us to film that because we had been there for a pre-production meeting right before we started shooting when he needed to have his air passage cleared and she'd asked us to leave. And of course I'll never forget Roger's reaction in the meeting which was, "Why? Why are you making 'em leave?" They could communicate with just gestures.

I'm sure after I pulled the camera down, I realized after filming it why she really didn't want us to see it. ... I think he saw the look on my face of guilt because I think that's why he sent me the email that I got when I got home that said, "Great stuff!!! I'm so glad we got something today that nobody sees: suction." He knew that I was feeling [uneasy], and he wanted to let me know right then and there—this was at the very beginning of our filming—that, "I want this. This is important. And this is the kind of filming and the kind of film it should be."

That is so rare for any subject to take that point of view in a film about themselves. But it's especially rare with someone in that situation. And then on top of it to be someone who's famous like Roger, because usually famous people have a different definition of what candid and honest is.

CE: He wanted to go as far as he could go and be as honest. He liked gritty stuff. He liked happy stuff too, but Roger liked seeing things stripped down to the bare essentials. Who are we at our core? Who are we when everything that we know and take for granted is taken from us, and how do we survive that? He thinks that that's how his heart talks to your heart. He is us. He's not this icon. He is us.

Something Chaz wanted changed

SJ: Early on, Roger's bar mates and colleagues talk about how he had the worst taste in women. One of the things Chaz said was, "OK, I understand why that's gotta be in the movie, but can you somehow make a distinction between him then and now?" And she was right, she was absolutely right. So we went back and inserted where Bruce Elliot says about these women that [it was] "back then" in the bars or something to that effect. So you understand that this was an early Roger thing, not a later Roger thing. And that's a small thing, but it is significant.

CE: And just for the record, I've known some of Roger's girlfriends. Not all the very early ones. The ones I knew were not psychos or gold diggers.

SJ: Although the one I did meet—and I don't know her name so I can't share it anyway—I wouldn't say she was a psycho or a gold digger, but she was rather strange.

As a Chicago film critic and fellow University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign alumnus, it goes without saying that my review of "Life Itself," acclaimed documentary Steve James' ("Hoop Dreams") movie about Roger Ebert's life that shares a title with the late film critic's memoir, could never be unbiased. That the documentary about this man features a Chicagoan picking up a copy of RedEye featuring Ebert on the cover and my column about him inside is almost more than I can handle.

Of course I didn't always agree with him. Journalists, and particularly critics, can be, in Ebert's own words, "tactless, egotistical, merciless and a showboat." But Ebert's influence went beyond opinion, and "Life Itself" will never be regarded solely as a story about movies.

Five months before Ebert's death in April 2013, James met with him to discuss making a film. The next day, the critic, who hadn't spoken, eaten or drank since his 2006 surgery for thyroid cancer, went into the hospital and learned he had a hairline fracture of the femur. "Life Itself" features much footage of Ebert in a hospital bed or at the Rehabilitation Institute of Chicago. He wanted this. "I'm happy we got a great thing that nobody ever sees: suction!" Ebert emailed James after the filmmaker captured footage of a procedure not often seen in movies. Later, when Ebert's cancer metastasized, he told James that despite Ebert's wife Chaz's discomfort with sharing the news, "It would be a major lapse to have a documentary that doesn't contain the full reality."

Life Itself

How wonderful for a documentary to put such value in honesty. For the first time, Chaz reveals that she and her husband met in an AA meeting. The film also features a moment on "The Tonight Show with Johnny Carson" when Ebert pans "Three Amigos" even though Chevy Chase is sitting right next to him. The on-set "Siskel and Ebert" bickering and competition is the stuff of legend, even when the cameras weren't rolling. The two icons for film criticism collided under an umbrella of ego and resentment, respect and love, and James shows how Siskel's handling of terminal cancer influenced Ebert's own, slower departure.

Mild omissions: There's more to examine about the notion of a possible conflict of interest when a critic befriends an artist. "Life Itself" doesn't really get a perspective on that from Ebert, who became close to filmmakers including Martin Scorsese and Ramin Bahrani. (This also may factor into the doc itself, as James likely didn't want to do too much with statements about Ebert's saltier days.) The film also could have made more of Ebert's astonishingly prolific blogging once he embraced that outlet for his voice.

These are small complaints. "Life Itself" is full of courage but not afraid of weakness. It shows how with only two choices, it seems so easy for a movie to get a thumbs up, or for someone in pain to give one. It isn't.

Though it sounds like a metal band, “Snowpiercer” is a riveting sci-fi adventure only a few steps down from “Dark City” or “Children of Men.” It pummels forward like the train on which the action is set, and you don’t particularly want to reach the end.

It’s 2031, 17 years after some bonehead thought an artificial cooling substance would cure global warming. Unfortunately, said bonehead failed to anticipate that the product would freeze the whole planet and wipe out all civilization not on a train set up to run across the globe. That unescapable vessel long has been forcefully compartmentalized by class. The unlucky passengers at the end exist in abysmal conditions, suppressed by leaders like Mason (an excellently odd but never cartoonish Tilda Swinton) who insist everyone must occupy their “pre-ordained, particular position.”

Snowpiercer

Curtis (a very good Chris Evans) has had enough, particularly considering the disgusting protein block provided as the only food and the upper class’ fondness for kidnapping children. The revolt is on (with assistance from Jamie Bell and Octavia Spencer). This requires a certain degree of planning and an abundance of nerve from oppressed folks trying to storm the powers that be with a startling quantity of axes.

Sometimes quite funny, the English-language debut from South Korean director/co-writer Bong Joon-ho (2006’s monster bash “The Host”) obviously exists as more than a literally nonstop battle. The filmmaker nods to many topical notions of economic disparities, abuses of leadership, propaganda and genocide but handles them with a steady hand. Like the unauthorized, near-futuristic sequel to the horrendous “Noah,” “Snow-piercer” shows the rebirth of civilization as a return to the terrible lessons we should have put behind us, while history is remembered only through storytelling and drawings. Not until Joon-ho strains to reveal multiple secrets in a short span of time is he tripped up by the sheer quantity of characters and messages, lingering a little too long with an ending that goes soft.

Otherwise the movie’s a lit fuse, almost like a post-apocalyptic “Wizard of Oz” mixed with an inverted “Charlie and the Chocolate Factory,” focused on everyone who didn’t get a golden ticket. (Please ignore any temptation to make comparisons to “Under Siege 2.”) It’s also the year’s third impressive movie featuring a train, following “The Grand Budapest Hotel” and, in an unforgettable, hammer-focused sequence, “The Raid 2.” Coincidence? Yes. Problem? No.

Words of wisdom

Are these celebs more than just a pretty face?

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Well, folks, it appears the celebrities have started their Fourth of July vacations early—there's barely a scandal to be found out there. Good for them! But that doesn't mean they've been leaving their Twitter accounts alone. We created some inspirational posters from some of their best tweets in case you need inspiration to plow through to your own three-day weekend. Enjoy!

red hot

Still the fairest of them all?

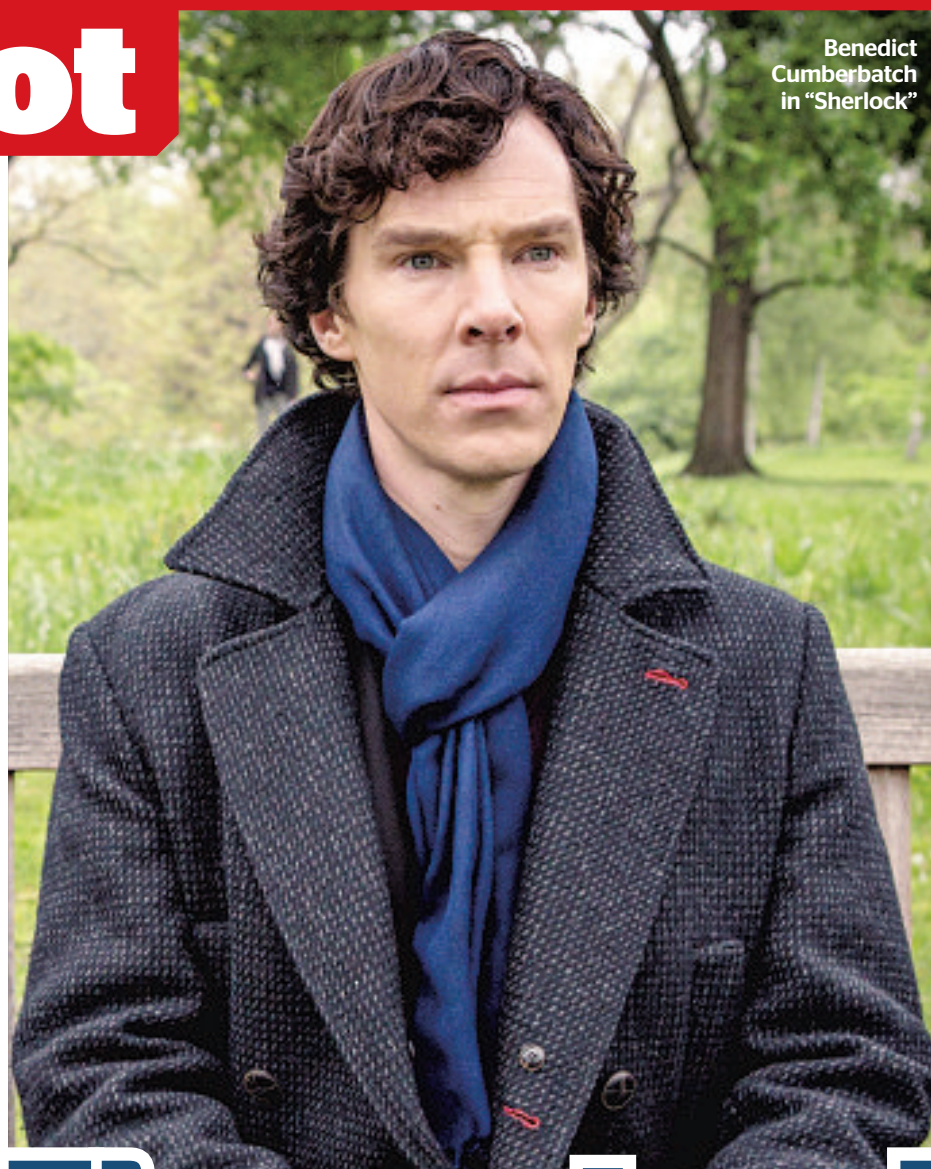

Stand aside, What's-Her-Name

from "Frozen." Amy Adams may be returning to Giselle's shoes in a sequel to Disney's 2007 live-action hit, "Enchanted," deadline.com reports. Original cast members, including Adams, Patrick Dempsey, James Marsden and Idina Menzel, have yet to be confirmed as stars, but hopefully their stories have remained just as happily-ever-after.

Think ink

Kelly Osbourne has a new tattoo, and we'll give you three guesses where it is. Give up? Her scalp. The E! host tweeted a pic of her "Stories..." ink this weekend, then shared her reasoning for the new design on "Live with Kelly and Michael." "I don't want to wake up every day and look the same," she said. "I'm the kind of person that will go out of their way to purposefully make myself look different," she said. Success!

Benedict Cumberbatch in "Sherlock"

Elementary!

Benedict Cumberbatch fans, rejoice! The creators of "Sherlock" have confirmed that BBC One hit will be back for a fourth, three-episode series in 2015, kicked off by a special to be filmed in January. Yes, Holmes and Watson's antics are far from their return, but at least we're getting a little something extra this time around.

Alicia Silverstone as Cher Horowitz in "Clueless"

It's my most capable-looking outfit!

Literally every woman between the age of 14 and 35 has dreamed of owning Cher Horowitz's closet and outfit-selection software from "Clueless."

Well, guess freakin' what. British shopping site Metail has created a Cher-inspired online fitting room that allows users to input their personal data, then try on the movie's costumes, including the yellow plaid getup. This is clearly the best way to avoid an accidental Amber copycat situation.

Only in nightmares

Weezer is playing its entire first album at Riot Fest this year, which can only mean one thing—a new release is on the horizon. The band revealed the cover of "Everything Will Be Alright In The End" via a teaser trailer Wednesday, along with a new song titled "My Mystery," mtv.com reports. A release date has yet to be announced, but this cover art suggests the album is not for children.

THE QUOTE
“Oh, I hope so! I don't know if there will be a part for me, but I hope so. She's so fun to work with.”

—“Orange Is the New Black” star Kimiko Glenn, to Vulture, on whether she'll be guest-starring on “Girls” next season. (To clarify, Glenn appeared in a music video that was directed by Lena Dunham.)

THE DIGIT

$600M

That's how much money “Maleficent” has made in the global box office after only five weeks, thr.com reports. That makes it the No. 4 title of the year so far; “X-Men: Days of Future Past” has hauled in $713.9 million.
